ACHA and NIHD Form Partnership to Promote Inter-Professional Expertise in Healthcare Design

The American College of Healthcare Architects (ACHA), and the Nursing Institute for Healthcare Design (NIHD), are pleased to announce a new partnership to promote inter-professional expertise in the healthcare design process. Board certified ACHA architects provide expertise at the highest level of healthcare design and planning. NIHD members provide clinical expertise that encourages optimal operational solutions. This collaboration will help shape the future and quality of healthcare design.

About NIHD:

NIHD membership is comprised of individuals and nurses in architecture / engineering firms, healthcare / university systems, and consulting practices. The organization and its members provide academic resources, innovative ideas, and stress the importance of evidence-based design.

About ACHA:

Our vision at ACHA is to transform healthcare through better built environments.

ACHA Certificate Holders are architects distinguished in the specialty of healthcare design through Board certification and is the only specialty certification recognized by the American Institute of Architects (AIA). They must exhibit experience and skills, through extensive healthcare design experience and rigorous standards and testing.
